

Urban Mining Project

April 2015

Many resources pass through our hands as consumers (cardboard, glass, aluminum, etc.,) the Urban Mining Project reclaims and re-purposes these materials, adding value to them -- making something aesthetic or practically useful.

NOTES:

The umbrella theme I aim to articulate with my initial body of work has social, economic, as well as aesthetic components. It's working title is "Urban Mining," which is about taking the many resources that pass through our hands as consumers (cardboard, glass, aluminum, etc) and re-purposing and adding value to them -- making something aesthetic or practically useful. I know that 'practically useful' pushes the edge of art into design, but I feel that there is a big room to explore there.

I had a lot a corrugated cardboard sheet left over from my laser-cutting venture and found that I when I separated the cardboard, I was left with a wonderfully durable and malleable kraft paper. So I've started using it as the substrate to develop a body of mixed media paintings.

KRAFT PAPER: Pulp produced by the kraft process is stronger than that made by other pulping processes and removes most of the lignin present originally in the wood. Low lignin is important to the resulting strength and durability of the paper.

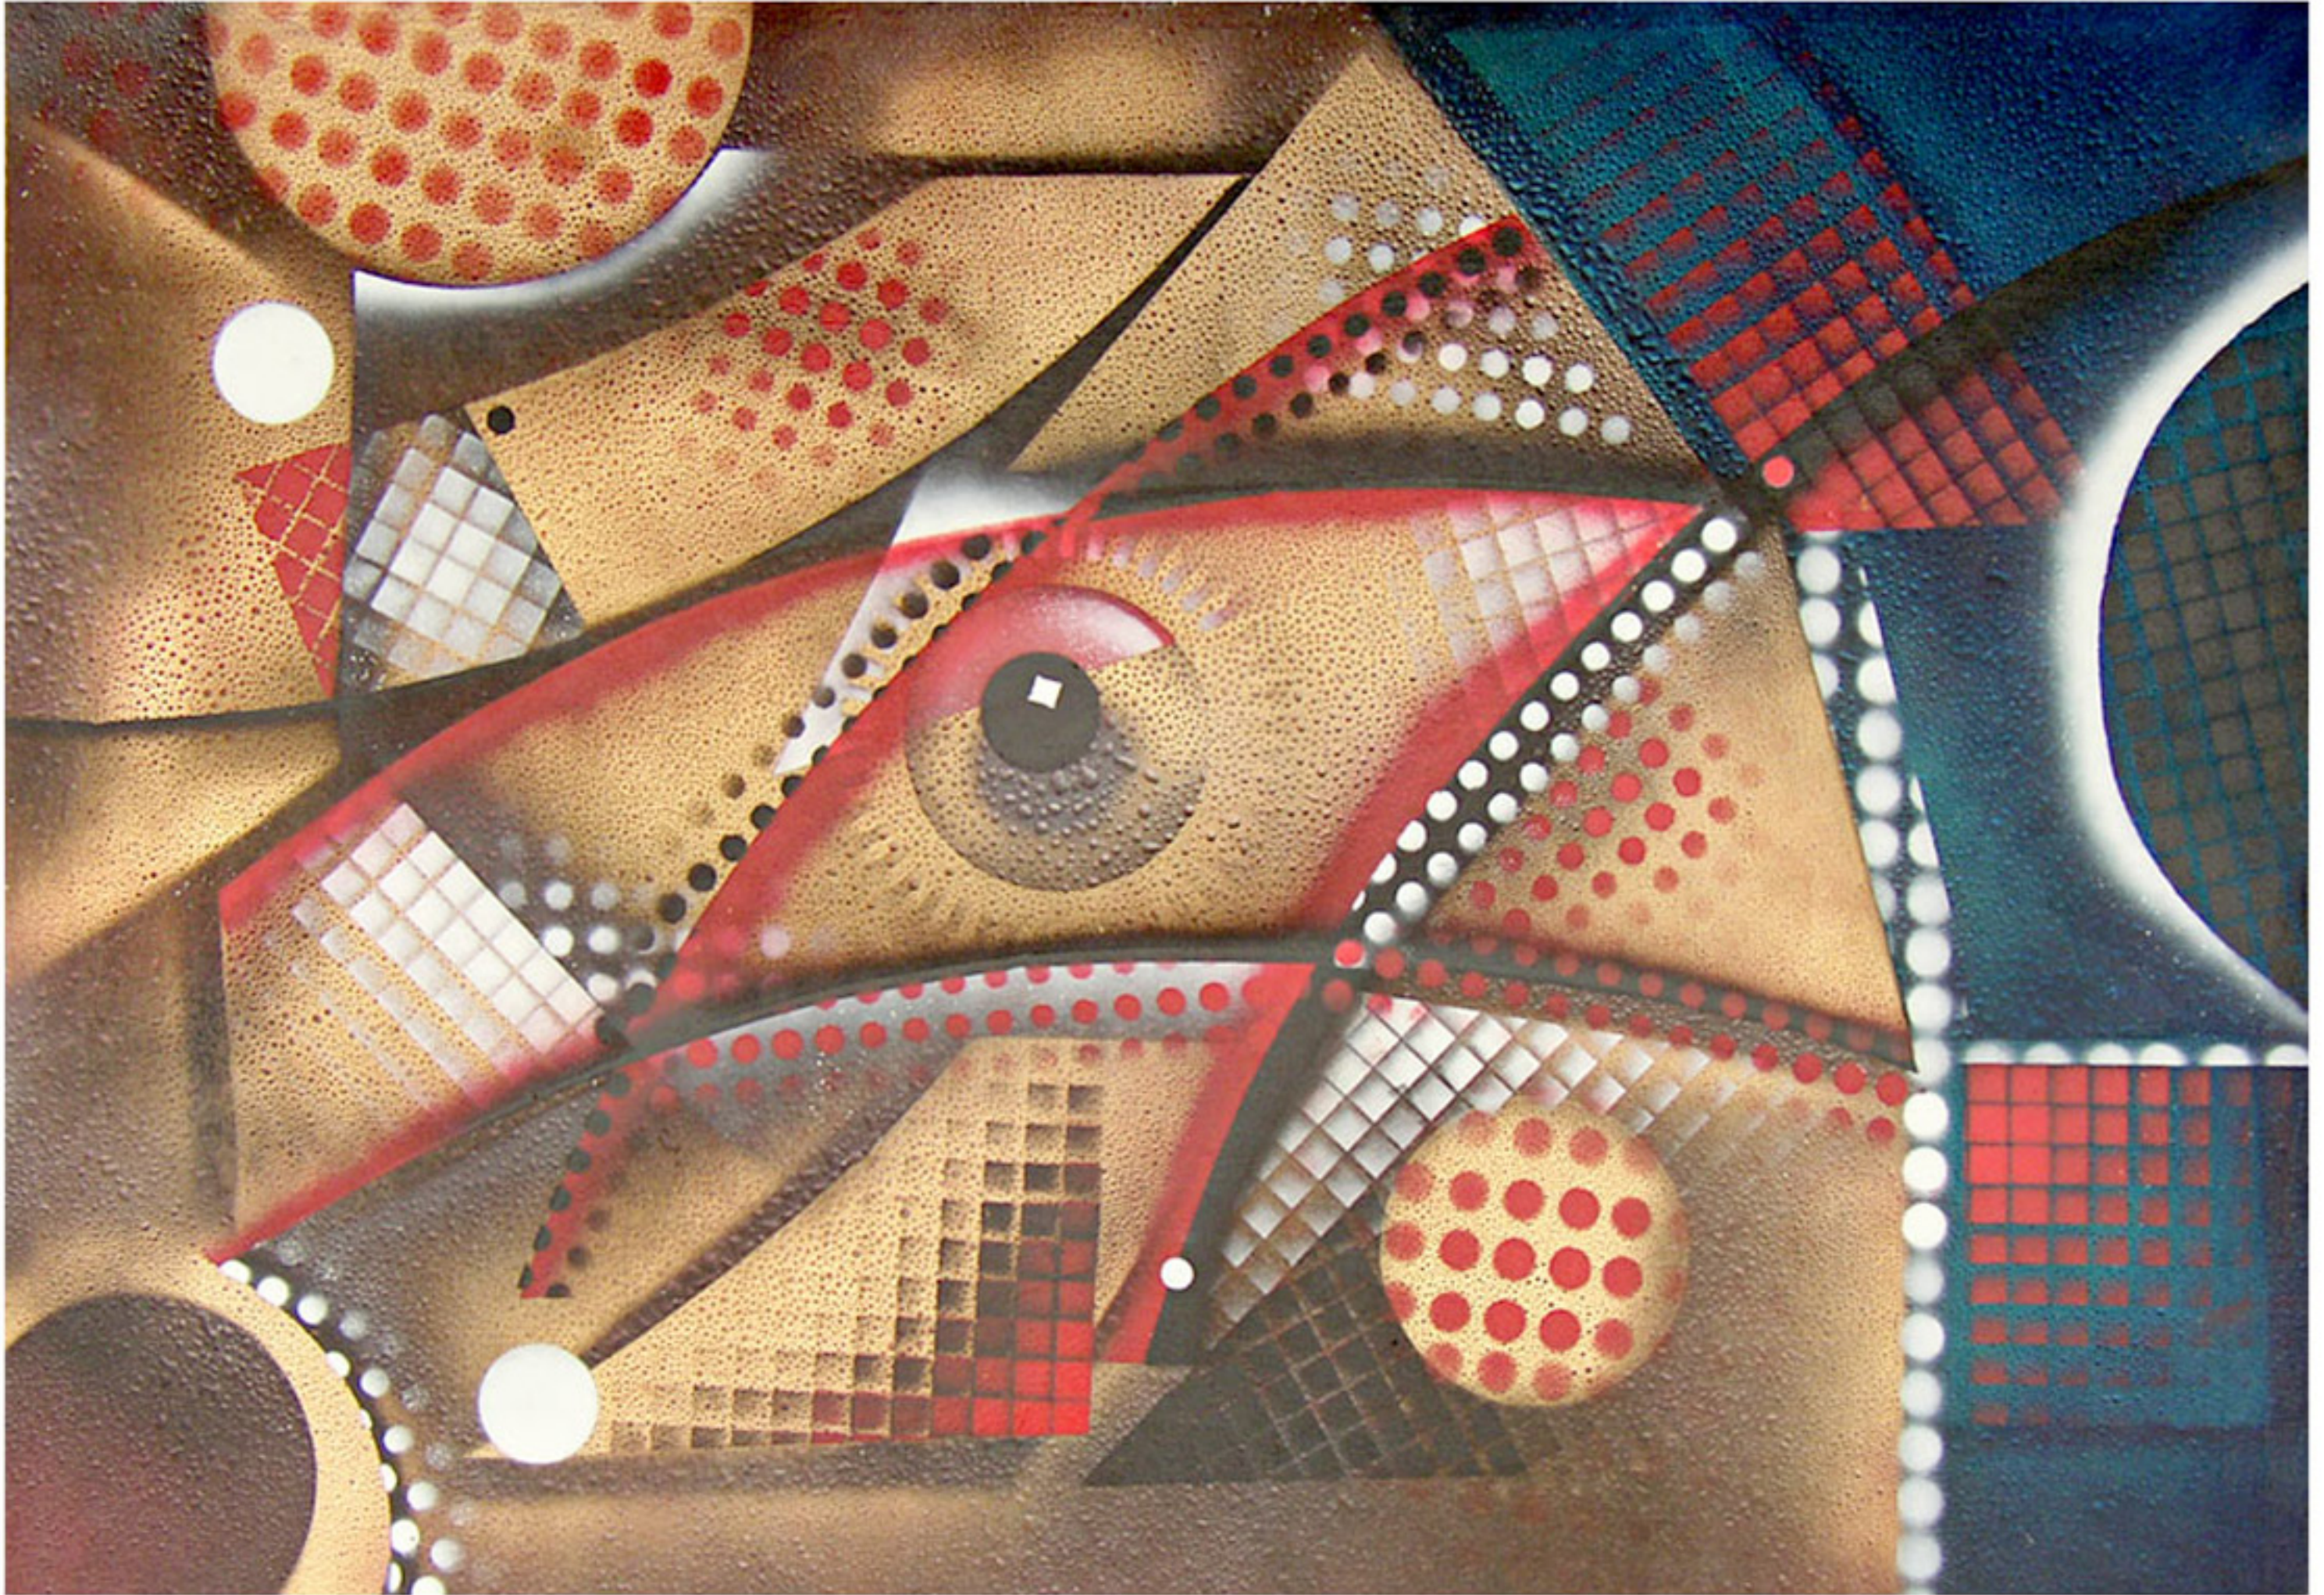

In the process of separating and reclaiming the kraft paper from corrugated cardboard, its tendency to ripple slightly can add surprising elements of dimension, texture and topography that catches light in unexpected ways.
