Black Lives

Shut-In Portraits: People to Spend the Pandemic with

This is my reflection.

The continuing killing of black people by agents of our government, the worst of police officers, not the best, has left me numb. I'm past the shock and disbelief. The fear and rage have worn me out. My usual optimism that change is possible is hanging on by a thread. But hang on I must because there is no alternative, lest we all die— all black bodies die. After all, structural racism at its core is violent. It strips us of our dignity and our birthright. It makes us invisible to many and hyper-visible to some who see black bodies as targets. Our lives don't matter to both the blind who won't see us and to the blinded who won't stop seeing us as targets.

My reflection is not in any way a call for violence or revenge. I also mourn the killing of police officers and I grieve with their families, just as I grieve with the families of African American children who have been killed by police officers. (Please Note* )

Saying Hello to my dear,
Carlean Montgomery

When she sang the Gospel,
she stopped my world.

She loved her soaps,
while she ironed.

She let you know
you didn't want to mess with her pots
when she was cooking.

If she had troubles,
she didn't tell me.

The rock for many.

She had troubles.

You'll never get a better hug.

She called me her white son.
I called her Carlean.
Then she sang the Gospel ...

Sweet rejoicing, now, she with the Reverend.

Deep abiding love.

Carlean with Diamonds, and then she sang the Gospel!

With fears of a new recession and financial collapse, times like these call for resilient and strong leadership in healthcare, business, government and wider society. Immediate relief measures need to be implemented and adjusted for those that may fall through the cracks.

What Uncertain Times Call For
I know what you Mean

Maybe He said Hola!, Maybe Allah!
I don't know, but I wanted to treat him
with dignity and respect, fairness and a night out.

But he died.

An essential worker
in the pandemic
providing for his family.

He loved his family.
He was beloved.

He is beloved
and his wife and children
